Chewing Gum in War As Soldier Equipment

Chewing gum as a shock absorber for the ear drum is the latest war discovery.

Men in the trenches are constantly demanding gum for the allaying of the shock to the ear drums, which is caused by the bursting of shells on the battle line, according to a statement made by Mrs. Joseph W. Fletcher last night at the meeting of the made by Mrs. Joseph W. Fletcher last night at the meeting of the Brookland unit of the American Red Cross. The reason of the help to the ear drum is the continual action of the jaws, which nullifies the effect of the detonation. This is the first instance in which chewing gum has been used in war, and, according to advices received from the front this is doing its bit to win the war for the allies. It is not supposed that the Germans win the war for the alites. It is not supposed that the Germans know of the peculiar qualities of the gum, as it is not used as com-monly in Germany as in the other
